Radiological-ultrasound multimodality study of canine rectal tumors. The aim of the study was to evaluate and compare various ultrasound (US) criteria with conventional magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) features of canine rectal tumors. Rectal US and MRI studies of 75 dogs (43 males and 32 females) with rectal masses (mean age \pm SD, 9.5 ± 7.7 years) were retrospectively reviewed. Various US criteria (hypochoic, heterogeneous, cystic, solid, hyperechoic, or multilobular appearance) and MRI features (presence of edema, wall thickening, and contrast enhancement) were analyzed. For US, the site, appearance, and lesion size were recorded. The site of involvement was categorized as antero-medial (AM), median, or postero-medial (PM) rectal segment. Submucosal and intraluminal extension (SE) of the lesion was recorded. For MRI, the presence of edema, wall thickening, and contrast enhancement was recorded. The US and MRI features were compared. Lesion size was calculated. A
