At its most basic level, Share for Review lets you embed images in the review process. You simply select the file you'd like to review, and Share for Review does the rest—simply let your stakeholders review the image in the context of the Photoshop file, without having to leave the application. Share for Review is available in the Share panel—selecting an image and selecting Share for Review. You'll see a Create Link with Share for Review button in the Share panel that will, when clicked, pull up the embed Share for Review dialog. Selecting a shared local file (applies only to local files for now) allows you to get an inline version of that image in your review. With embedded local files, you'll see a preview of the local file in your review, with that file's scale larger than the heft of the local file as it is in your application. With remote files, you'll see the preview (again, larger than the usual image size), but with only the local file's scaled down version. This makes it much easier for those stakeholders to "get the image" without the added large image files. Selecting the embedded local version of the image opens the Embed panel, where you can use the horizontal ruler to pinpoint the point of the review item in the Photoshop file. Below the ruler, you'll see the embedded image preview, and with the right click you can either:
